SUBJECT: Coffee Problems Brewing in Brazil

Brazil's new government, which took office on March 15, 1964, has adopted coffee policies that could seriously affect the future of the International Coffee Agreement (ICA) and economic relations and the United States. The two most important questions at price paid for coffee by the Brazilian government to domestic the production of soluble (instant) coffee in Brazil.

Previous Policy. During the presidency of Humberto Casto (March 1964-March 1967) coffee growers exerted little influence on government. Coffee policy was designed to encourage crop diversification.

A Cup of COFFEE: OR, Coffee in its Colours.

For Men and Christians to turn Turks, and think
T' excuse the Crime because 'tis in their drink,
Is more then Magick, and does plainly tell
Coffee's extraction has its heats from Hell.
Pure English Apes! ye may, for ought I know,
Would it but mode, learn to eat Spiders too.
Should any of your Grandsires Ghosts appear
In your Wax-Candle-Circles, and but hear
The name of Coffee so much call'd upon,
Then see it drank like scalding Phlegeton;
Would they not startle, think ye, all agreed,
'Twas Conjurat[i]on both in Word and Deed;
Or Catiline's Conspirators, as they stood
Sealing their Oaths in Draughts of reeking Blood?
The merriest Ghost of all your Sires would say,
Your Wine's much worse since his last yesterday.
He'd wonder how the Club had qiv'n a Hop

Tonight at Ten, we have a special report, on the desperate scramble, to escape Sudan. More evacuations by sea of foreign nationals, as the warring factions allow a ceasefire, so thousands can escape. A moment of relief for these people but also for the Sudanese a very bittersweet moment because many wonder if they will ever come back. Tonight, the last British nationals flown out of the capital Khartoum, arrive back in the UK, via Cyprus. The UK Government says there'll be another flight tomorrow for British nationals, from Port Sudan. Also tonight...

The issue of who is entitled to receive state benefits is a political hot potato, with elements of the press actively promoting the impression that some of the recipients are intentionally obtaining support in a deceptive or dishonest way.

When there is suspicion of deliberate misrepresentation of individuals' motivation and inaccurate characterisation of the poor, it is important to examine the issue as carefully and objectively as possible. I used the Learning on Screen databases TRILT and BoB to conduct the television arm of a broader study of news coverage of "benefit fraud" and five related terms.

TRILT was used to look for occurrences of the keywords for the decade from January 2008 to December 2017. Additionally, BoB was used to conduct a more detailed analysis of programme transcripts for the final year of that window. (Print media during the same period was analysed using LexisNexis, but I won't say anything further about that in this context).

The survey put a spotlight on the particular relevance of several documentaries, both one-offs such as Tricks of the Dole Cheats, and series such as Saints and Scroungers and Council House Crackdown. In both broadcast media and print formats, a strong correlation was made between criminality and receiving benefits, despite the fact that government figures show less than 1% of benefits were claimed fraudulently. The role of the media in both reinforcement of prior views and in agenda-setting were considered.

Abstract

Framed by a literature on media coverage of welfare, "poverty porn" and "poverty propaganda," and its emphasis on political messaging and ideology, this article explores reporting of benefit fraud in the United Kingdom. In a comprehensive and systematic assessment, it illuminates the structure and extremely large volume of benefit fraud coverage, 2008–2017, across national, sub-national, regional and local newspapers, mainstream television, TV documentaries, BBC web output, and BBC radio. With the aid of the 2016 British Social Attitude survey, and utilizing the most current conceptualizations of the processes underpinning media influence, it argues that this tsunami of coverage will have had a significant impact on the public. The results are explored in relation to their political and ideological implications, and their relevance to a much broader array of media discourses.

Dear Mr. [Name],

As you will probably know, I have just returned to the theatre after some months absence, and during the past few I have been giving very serious consideration to our Conference. Looking at the great mass of Conference reports, I asked myself the question of all this, what are the key questions to us all should give first attention? Now can we tell all this down to management proprietors? The answer, I believe, is that we are three main points that we have to concentrate upon. They are:

- The formation of mobile groups, or the inclusion in the repertoire of every branch of items suitable for performance at meetings.
- Amateur and other functions of the Labour Movement, and will provide financial help to our actors and producers. It will also give practical help to our actors and producers. It will also give practical help to our actors and producers. It will also give practical help to our actors and producers.
- The obtaining of affiliations from the mass labour organizations - particularly the Trades Councils and Co-operative Societies - in every town where we have a branch.
- The choice of our plays and the training of our actors and producers.
