The conditions of the bourgeois society are indee...
In England was created a system of education and work that was different from what had been established in Scotland. This was called the "Scottish System," and it was implemented in the early 19th century. The system was based on the idea that education and work should be combined to provide a holistic education for children. The system was characterized by the establishment of schools and workhouses, where children were educated and worked in a systematic manner. The system was seen as a way to improve the social and economic status of the working class, and it was widely seen as a success. However, it was also criticized for being too rigid and for not providing enough opportunities for children to develop their individuality. The Scottish System had a significant influence on education and work in the United States, where it was adopted and adapted to fit the local context.
