PROVINCIALISING NATURE

Michela Coletta & Malayna Raftopoulos (eds.)

Date: 21 November, 17:30-19:30

Location: Court Room, Senate House, first floor

The Institute of Latin American Studies (ILAS) invites you for an evening of lively debate and discussion to celebrate the launch of their new publication Provincialising Nature.

After an introduction from Professor Linda Newson, the Institute Director, some of the contributors will present chapters from the book. There will also be a special guest discussant.

Confirmed speakers include:

- Dr Michela Coletta (University of Warwick)
- Dr Malayna Raftopoulos (Aalborg University)
- Dr Jeffery R. Webber (Queen Mary University of London)
- Dr Marieke Riethof (University of Liverpool)
- Dr Graham Woodgate (Institute of the Americas, UCL)

A drinks reception will follow, and there will be the opportunity to buy the book at an exclusive discounted price.

'This book crosses boundaries about knowledges and sensitivities on the politics of nature in Latin America. It offers a clear and diverse analysis of issues from climate change to the ontological turn on nature and society, from Pacha Mama to hybrid cultures, showing the impressive resurgence of Latin American political ecology.'

Eduardo Gudynas (Centro Latinoamericano de Ecología Social, Uruguay)

'This landmark collection powerfully reveals the mainstreaming of a new environmental politics in Latin America – one that not only recognises the power of social institutions but the agency of nature in human affairs.'

John Andrew McNeish (Norwegian University of Life Sciences, Norway)
