* She would have read the difficult chapter twice. The second time something would have caught — a phrase she didn't quite understand, a sentence that sounded like it was talking about her. She would have written about it badly, then better, then almost well. By the end of the term she would have been someone slightly different from the person who began it.

She used the model. Hi, how can I help? The chapter was summarised. The essay was structured. The grade was good. The person who began the term completed it.

Some formations cannot be efficient. She will never know who she did not become.
