

This is a really good project. The introduction is very clear and focused and the literature review is nicely written, demonstrating a very good understanding of the theoretical models that have been developed on crime and punishment. The data collection via surveys is very good and represents a lot of hard work. Well done for that. You have also generated some very interesting correlations in the data and your comparison with similar work is well done. The weakness in this project is one that you highlight yourself in the criticisms section—your data was not good enough to address questions having to do with risk aversion thus you were not able to make predictions about the causality of theoretical mechanisms on illegal car parking behaviour at Warwick. Overall, this is a very nice project and could form the basis for a more substantial piece of research.
