

Dear

We have just celebrated the end of the academic year with graduation – a huge number of students successfully completing undergraduate and postgraduate degrees, including a number of PhD students who had been both students and teachers during their time at Warwick. There were a few selfies with the Chancellor, and as ever the most amazing display of shoes. It is also great to hear from our graduates on all they have achieved since leaving Warwick – please do keep your stories coming as we love to hear from you! In return, I hope you'll find lots of interest in this latest edition of the newsletter.

LAW SCHOOL DEVELOPMENTS

Law School Collaboration with WBS

Colleagues in the Law School will be delivering modules to Bank of England staff as part of a new Bank of England – WBS postgraduate qualification in Central Banking and Financial Regulation. Professor Dalvinder Singh, Dr Giuliano Castellano and Dr Andreas Kokkinis will be teaching with WBS staff on the core modules, drawing on their joint experience of teaching on Warwick's LLM in International Corporate Governance and Financial Regulation.

STAFF SPOTLIGHT

Our very own Professor Dalvinder Singh has been awarded a prestigious Fernand Braudel Senior Fellowship, by the European University Institute in Florence from May-July 2016. During his fellowship he will be participating in workshops on his current area of research associated with the European Banking Union and cross border banking supervision and resolution, and the challenges faced by countries in the European and Central Asia region. This work forms part of a World Bank Project he is working on in collaboration with Katia D'Hustler and Pamela Lintner. Dal currently teaches on our International Corporate Governance and Financial Regulation and our International Banking Regulation modules. He and other Law School colleagues are also involved in an exciting new venture with Warwick Business School to train central bankers in the UK. Find out more.

MODULE SPOTLIGHT

We have many new modules in the pipeline including Corporate Tax Law; Crime, Justice & Global Security; Law & Inequality in the Transnational Food Regime; International Commercial Litigation; Law of International Financial Transactions; Economic Analysis of Law; Law & Policy of International Public Finance; European Union Intellectual Property Law & Policy; some of which will be running in 2016/17.

Law of International Financial Transactions - New for 2016

The Law of International Finance Transactions (LIFT) examines the financialisation of law that has taken place with increasing speed over the last 30 years. Taught by an experienced structured finance lawyer, LIFT motivates the legal understanding of this complex area with financial transactions, from syndicated credit agreements, to securitizations, to swaps. The wider theoretical aim of the module is the critical engagement with the ideas of ethics, norms and complexity within financial development, regulation and crisis.

The primary legal focus of LIFT is English law-governed credit agreements in the form current in City of London practice, but given the international nature of the subject, due to the use of such English law-governed agreements globally, references to the laws of the EU and other jurisdictions (particularly New York, Germany and France) will be made at appropriate junctures. By using the credit agreement as the anchor of the module, rather than international and somewhat abstract banking regulations, LIFT attempts to offer a system-wide perspective which links the more arcane aspects of the secondary market in debt to the more familiar and tangible context of industrial business and society as a whole.

NEW Lacuna Magazine Edition on Migration in Europe

Lacuna published a thought-provoking selection of migrant experiences across Europe, with exclusive features from Greece, Germany and the UK. The European Commission published yet another version of its Common European Asylum System, detailing 'fair and efficient' procedure to ensure the rights of asylum seekers are protected in every EU country they set foot in. That good intentions are too rarely followed through is perhaps the common theme in refugee and migration policy in European countries today. In an exclusive report Dario Sabaghi shares stories from the borders of northern Greece where tens of thousands of refugees waited for Macedonia to open its borders, so they could travel to northern Europe. He witnessed the final days of the Idomeni camp before the Greek government ordered its evacuation back in May. What happens once refugees finally reach their desired destination? Kim Harrisberg reports from Germany, the only European country to say 'refugees welcome', where she finds shadows of the country's past influencing policy towards the new arrivals. Here in the UK, Rebecca Omonira reports on a specific aspect of migration policy and how it affects foreign national women fleeing domestic violence. A timely piece with Theresa May the UK's newly appointed prime minister responsible for managing Brexit.

Since the referendum, questions about the EU are still being asked in the UK. Anil Awesti explores the question 'What does the EU do, and what relationship can post-Brexit Britain have with it?' in a video lecture encouraging a more informed debate about the pros and cons of membership of the European Union.

Lacuna is currently inviting submissions on all issues concerning human rights and social justice in the Western Balkans and its diaspora, to be published in late 2016. To discuss your pitch and submit your draft, get in touch with Lacuna editors at hello@lacuna.org.uk. The deadline is 31st August 2016 (but Warwick alumni may ask for an extension!). We also consider unsolicited pitches related to human rights and social justice around the world – we are especially keen to hear from former Warwick students.
