

PAIS at Warwick Summer Reading 2022

We don't expect students to read anything in particular before starting with us in the Autumn but we know lots of you like to have recommendations, so we suggest some popular books on contemporary issues as well as some podcasts and blogs. We also encourage you to enjoy a relaxing summer before university as much as you can, because you'll obviously have a lot of reading to do once you join us.

So - we'd encourage you to make the most of the summer. Enjoy the outdoors as much as you can, listen to podcasts, discover new music, rediscover old playlists, read the novels you've not had time for, watch lots of films and binge on boxed sets.

It will help with your course if you get into the habit of reading quality journalism on current political developments and watching or listening to quality news and current affairs broadcasts and webcasts.

Here are some books you could take a look at if you want some recommendations. Again, these are not books you have to read to prepare for the course, but they're on subjects that you will definitely encounter during your studies...and they're also a great read. There should be something here for you, whatever your interests within politics and international studies. You certainly don't have to read all of them, since it's a long list! You don't have to read any of them if you don't want to! But if you're looking for our recommendations from which you can choose some summer reading, then here they are...

The step up from school or college to University can be a bit daunting and you might be concerned about how we expect you to think and learn at this level. We'd recommend this new book on how to approach studying at University:

Sarah Birrell Ivory, Becoming a Critical Thinker: For Your University Studies and Beyond (Oxford University Press, 2021)
