

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Acknowledgments	6
Declaration	7
Abstract	8
Abbreviations	9

PART I. THE IDEAS OF CRITIQUE AND CRISIS IN SOCIAL THEORY

Chapter 1. Introduction	12
The ambivalent status of the ideas of crisis and critique	17
On the relationship between crisis and critique: the hypothesis of the ‘dialectical affinity’	25
Reconstructing connectedness: a methodological note	32
The organisation of the thesis	37
Chapter 2. ‘Critique’ and ‘Crisis’ in Contemporary Social Theory Between Normalization and Dissolution	42
Introduction	42
The Crisis of Critique	45
The critique of society and the disquiet of the 1960s-1970s	45
The systemic dissolution of critique: Remarks on Niklas Luhmann	52
The Critique of Crisis	57
The normalisation of the experience of crisis in the 1960s-1970s	57
The reflexive dissolution of crisis: Remarks on Ulrich Beck	66
Concluding Remarks	71

Chapter 3. On the Dialectical Affinity of ‘Critique and Crisis’ Rediscovering a Lost Connectedness	76
Introduction	76
Crisis and Critique as ‘Basic Concepts’ of Modernity: Notes on Reinhart Koselleck	79
The conceptual experience of the loss of experience	80
The unity and divorce of crisis and critique	85
Conceptualising the ‘dialectical affinity’	91
From crisis to critique	95
From critique to crisis	99
Concluding Remarks	103

PART II. THREE STUDIES IN RECONSTRUCTION

Chapter 4. Totalitarianism and the ‘Modesty’ of Critical Thinking: Hannah Arendt	109
Introduction	109
The modern reification of rupture	112
Totalitarianism as a Crisis-Critique ‘Movement’	117
Reconsidering our attitude towards the world: The ‘modesty’ of critique	124
Concluding Remarks	131
Chapter 5. The Government of Crisis and ‘the art of not being governed’: Michel Foucault	135
Introduction	135
The governmental threshold of modernity: Political reason, life and society	137
Sitting at the bedside: The discourse of crisis and therapeutic thinking	145
‘The art of not being governed’: Critique as historical practice and philosophical ethos	153
Concluding Remarks	161

Chapter 6. Pathologies of the Social and the ‘Communicative Power’ of Critique: Jürgen Habermas	165
Introduction	165
The possibility of a critique of society: Between philosophy and sociology	167
The sociological concept of crisis: Between Marxism and Neoconservatism	173
The dialectical affinity of crisis and critique: Between system and lifeworld	181
Concluding Remarks	189

PART III. CONCLUSION

Chapter 7. Conclusion	194
Bibliography	204