A film producer has to balance the creative and the pragmatic, and my degree greatly assisted in giving me the grounding in the former. A greater understanding and appreciation for art came from three years of studying the masters of cinema, and discussing their work. However, I had the frustration of analysing completed cinema that could not be changed in any way by my own hand, so the course had a positive effect in driving me to change that fact. Now, armed with a greater knowledge of cinema, I'm out in the world making them from scratch.

*The government requires all universities to survey graduates six months after they leave to ask about their employment circumstances, through the Destinations of Leavers from Higher Education survey. For some career paths graduates need to gain relevant experience, often at non-graduate level. It may therefore take some graduates longer than others to secure a graduate-level job.
