

This week is National Apprenticeship Week, a nationwide, celebration of apprenticeships, so is a great opportunity to find out everything you need to know about degree apprenticeships. With apprentices, employers, and universities sharing experiences and information throughout the week you can get a real insight into whether a degree apprenticeship is the right option for you.

‘When I read about degree apprenticeships, I was amazed by the prospects’

So, to help get you started, we’ve put together some of our online resources.

Watch our short video explaining exactly what a degree apprenticeship is.

Read about why our Apprentice Blogger Sabrina chose a Civil and Infrastructure Engineering Degree Apprenticeship and what she loves most about it.

‘I have been able to work on exciting projects including HS2 and I have had the chance to meet some incredible people in the industry. I am earning a salary, I will gain a BEng Honours degree and will also be incorporated by the end of it’.

Listen to our apprentice’s experiences of studying at a world-leading university and putting that knowledge into practice in the workplace.

Follow #NAW2021 for the latest updates from apprentices and employers across the country.

The University of Warwick offer a range of degree apprenticeship programmes and any vacancies with our employer partners will always be listed on our vacancies page. You can also sign up for emails to notify you of new opportunities as they become available.

If you have any questions about degree apprenticeships that don’t get answered during this week, you can get in touch with our Apprenticeships Team at apprenticeships@warwick.ac.uk.
